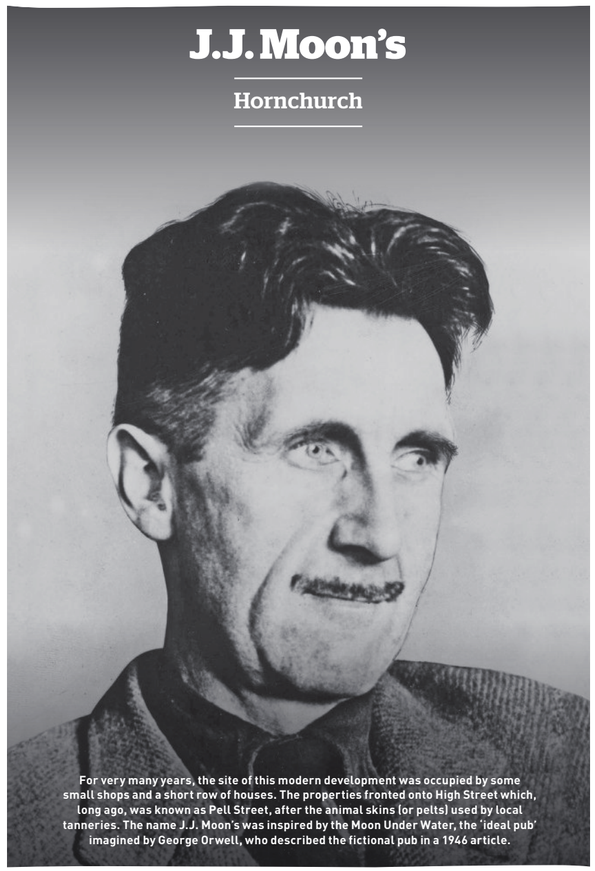
J.J. Moon's
Hornchurch



For very many years, the site of this modern development was occupied by some small shops and a short row of houses. The properties fronted onto High Street which, long ago, was known as Pell Street, after the animal skins (or pelts) used by local tanneries. The name J.J. Moon's was inspired by the Moon Under Water, the 'ideal pub' imagined by George Orwell, who described the fictional pub in a 1946 article.
